A. If you were asked to identify one hope that you have for our world today, what would it be and why?

B. Ernest L. Boyer, Sr. articulated that college is a time when students “go beyond their private interests, learn about the world around them, develop a sense of civic and social responsibility, and discover how they can contribute to the common good”. Reflecting on your own college years, in what ways has your education contributed to these objectives and/or fallen short?
